COMPETITION IN MILLING.

nowie knives and pistols for a purpose. In

The millers of Great Britain are now much reised in the discussion of American competion in milling wheat, the heavy importations of the most excellent quality of flour having greatly injured the business of milling in Engud and Scotland. In Glasgow, where the pas has slways suffered from foreign comin, there is now an unusual depression be heavy imports from the large mills consin and Minnesota, and it has be-satious question with mill owners in grand whether their investments will not so depreciate, if the competition is kept up, as to become entirely unprofitable. They, however, attribute the success of this country in making four to the virgin soil and the peculiarly hard kind of wheat which it produces, and think that by and by, when the soil becomes more exhausted, the advantage cannot be maintained by the American millers. Rut the fact is that this country has, in the past few years, made a grand strick toward cell pains, if it be possible, in the guality of their flour and in the economy and perfection of their grinding. Systems of milling in this country, deemed quite satisfactory no more than two years ago, are at present being remodelled in order to obtain greater mechanical efficiency, in the treatment of varied qualities of grain and to secure in the products a higher percentage of the finest and whitest flour. The eed of new and better systems is greater in England than in the United States, because here the wheats used are of more uniform quality, while in England the mills have to operate on an infinite variety of wheat from all lands and climes; hard, medium, soft, lean or ful berried, thick or thin skinned, clean or foul. A diversity, almost ordless, in the modes of grinding and in after treatment is necessitated by this variety, seeing that a process proved the bast for one class of wheat may fail to yield and wheatfrom the same soil may require different handling in different years. This coun try has also made marked progress in the methods of shipping flour and in its preparation for the royage. The long voyage around Cape Horn makes the experience of Facilie coast flour to Europe somewhat costly and hazardens, but with a canal at the Isthmus o would take a lively hand in the competition which is already being made so warm for the
